

FAASTeam presents:

Navigating SF BayArea Airspace

Let's face it, the SF Bay Area is sophisticated airspace. If you learned to fly at an untowered field in the middle of Iowa, transitioning to the bay area can be daunting. Knowing the local airspace, and successfully navigating around the San Francisco Bay Area takes a little practice and precision.

What is your Bay Area airspace competency? Can you successfully fly a Bay Tour through Class B and C? Can you navigate a Bay Tour route that doesn't require two-way communication? Do you know what SF Bay Area Airport you can operate at WITHOUT a Mode C transponder? Can you identify the appropriate airspace altitudes just east of Palo Alto and/or just northeast of Hayward? Do you know what "report the cement plant" means?

All this and more will be discussed and analyzed by San Carlos Flight Center CFI Justin Phillipson in a fun and informative manner, helping you stay safe and confident as you navigate the Bay Area skies.

Topics will include:

- SQL VFR arrival and departure routes
- SFO's unpublished VFR transition routes
